Your casino software will download to your Android or iPhone in the same way as a computer. This means that both devices use the same „soft” code that can translate between different platforms and uses various of the same features. There are slight differences in how the codes work which could affect the quality of gaming.

The difference comes from how the iPhone and Android run the „gambling” apps. Android utilizes the native code that's included in the android system and can thus optimize for the performance of these applications much superior to the iPhone and has its own architecture which is optimized to work with the Cocoa interface (which is the interface that the iPhone utilizes for its gambling experience in-game). In addition, Android uses much less memory than the iPhone and consequently is required to backup its data automatically whenever the app is deleted or moved. This makes the gameplay faster, but it also means that Android is a poor choice for those who are fond of streaming high-frames-per-second video on their mobile phones.
